My Approach

Counselling is like a journey where you are in the driver's seat and I am in the passenger seat. As the driver you are in control of where we go and how we get there. I am accompanying you as navigator for as long as you want me to. My job is to spot the signposts and support you in whatever challenges you are facing. Some of these challenges may be internal and some may be external: coming from yourself or from others. Some may come from me within a therapeutic relationship in which you are heard, understood and accepted.

Counselling is a safe place to bring difficult issues and feelings of any kind. It can therefore, sometimes, be an uncomfortable experience. However the counselling relationship enables you to process these difficulties, to discover healing and/or resolution and also to obtain a deeper understanding and acceptance of yourself.

Meetings

Counselling sessions usually occur weekly or fortnightly for an hour. However this is not fixed and we can decide this together.

It is important from time to time that we discuss how counselling is progressing. You are free to discuss this whenever you want but in any case I will ensure that this happens.

Counselling can continue for as long as we agree to work together. You can finish counselling whenever you want. If I need to end our counselling relationship then I will give you as much notice as I can.

Confidentiality

The counselling relationship is confidential. This is so that it can be safe for you to explore anything that you may wish to. This means that I will not discuss, anywhere else, either you or what you bring to counselling. Also, in order to protect your privacy, I would not acknowledge you if we met on the street unless you acknowledged me first.

However, I may discuss our work together with my supervisor. I would do this in such a way that you could not be identified.

The only exception to this would be if I believed that you could no longer be responsible for yourself and were likely to cause serious physical harm to yourself or others, or have harm caused to you. If I had such concerns I would discuss them first with you before taking any possible action.

I also keep progress notes of counselling sessions in an encrypted file on my computer. These are for my own use and are not available to any one else except you if you so wish. I keep these notes for 3 years after the end of counselling.

Qualifications and Experience
